ARE YOU 'EATING' YOUR EMOTIONS?

Eat in a setting where you feel relaxed. If you are eating in the car, in front of a computer while doing work or browsing the internet, or while using your phone, your body is in 'doing' rather than 'digesting' mode and not able to give full attention to eating. As a result, you may tend to eat more or eat foods that are not healing. If you feel like you are eating to quash an 'emotion' – a phenomenon described as 'lonely mouth' in Japan – see if you can first acknowledge and express your emotions in another way. These practices will all help with the digestive process – helping you to get the most out of food.

2. Eat according to the seasons

This may seem like a far stretch given our global food sources and supermarket choices, but choosing fruit and vegetables that are in season can go a long way to helping us get the nutrients we need at the right time and, if they are locally or nationally sourced too, supporting our local economy and reducing our carbon footprint.

It is also a gradual way of connecting to the natural 'cycle of life' that is all around us – in nature but also in our food. Foods that are grown in season tend to be picked when they are ripe, which increases the nutrient value. It also means that we are more likely to be supplied with the right balance of nutrients when we need them: Mother Nature cleverly provides vegetables rich in carotenes, or berries dense in vitamin C, for immune support in the autumn, for example.

Making soups and veg-based smoothies are excellent ways of packing in the nutrients. I firmly believe that we should eat foods that are warm in the colder months and foods that are cooler in the warmer months. According to naturopathic and traditional Chinese medicine principles, eating in this way also supports digestion. During the autumn and winter season, revive the slow cooker. Low temperatures preserve many of the essential nutrients found in meat and can also make it more digestible, without destroying the benefits of the amino acids. Aside from this, the slow cooker is a practical, cost-efficient way of having a meal ready at the end of the day.

3. Eat a rainbow a day

Each day, try to sample all the colours of food, including red, orange, yellow, green and purple, to ensure that you get enough of the important phytochemicals and their health benefits. Aim for a minimum of five portions of vegetables per day and three portions of fruit of varying colours (a portion is about a handful or 80g of cooked greens, a medium-sized tomato or apple). These are just some examples of the different coloured foods you can build into your day:

Numerous studies have shown the benefit of eating a Mediterranean-style diet on the ageing process. Its natural richness in colourful plant foods, healthy oils and lean protein sources, such as fish, pulses and seeds, makes it the ideal foundation for healthy living and aligns with my health philosophy. It has been linked with lower mortality rates, reduced onset of multiple chronic diseases and improved cognitive function. In fact, one large study found that following a Mediterranean diet for one year improved the health of participants' microbiomes (see the section on digestion below), as well as significantly increasing levels of cytokines – substances released by the immune system to moderate inflammation.

Good digestion

We are fast learning that good digestion is at the heart of good health. The gut is where we absorb nutrients, produce nutrients and serotonin, eliminate toxins and, to put it one way, empty our dustbin daily. Indeed, 70 per cent of the immune system is in the tissue of the gut and therefore it is pivotal in the moderation of inflammation.

However, it's important to know that our microbial diversity reduces with age, shifting more to an imbalance of less favourable than favourable bacteria and yeast (known as dysbiosis). Studies on centenarians show that the greater diversity of beneficial bacteria within the gut tissue (specifically bifidobacterium – a specific group of probiotic bacteria), the longer the life span. This may be because bifidobacterium species can actually reduce inflammation in places where it may be too high, and therefore reduce the negative impact it has on the rate of ageing.

The foods that form the cornerstone of the Mediterranean diet have been shown to promote good gut health, and epidemiological evidence also demonstrates that the longest living populations around the world often have a diet rich in fermented products – such as kimchi, sauerkraut, yoghurt, kefir – but also rich in colour and fibre. In these places, if meat is eaten, it is often slow-cooked to aid digestion.

How can we improve gut health for better ageing?

Eating a good mix of fruit and vegetables is always important, and particularly at this stage of life, not least because they are generally low in fat and high in fibre. Many studies have shown that people who consume diets high in fruit and vegetables have a lower risk of heart disease, stroke, diabetes and some forms of cancer. As rich sources of antioxidants, such as vitamin C and carotenoids, they can also help to counter the oxidative process of ageing.

Adults are recommended to have at least 30g of fibre daily. Average intakes are well below recommendations, with women managing only around 17g of dietary fibre per day. And while having a high-fibre diet may reduce the risk of heart disease, type 2 diabetes and bowel cancer at any age, this becomes especially relevant at this life stage when muscle tone naturally decreases and contractions in the gut, also known as peristaltic movement, can slow down. When waste matter becomes harder to excrete, it will

Friends in Nature

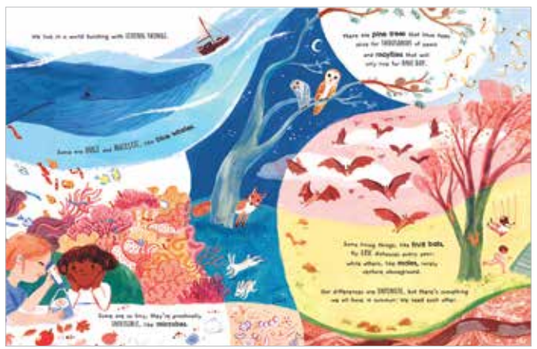

Discover Earth's Amazing Ecosystems

Marina Ruiz (Illustrator)

Discover the incredible ways in which animals and plants help each other, the planet, and YOU to thrive with this illustrated tale of symbiosis and ecology for children aged 5-7

- A celebration of biodiversity, packed with natural history facts presented in a lyrical, engaging narrative
- Intricate illustrations showcase the beauty of the natural world and provides lots of detail for children to pore over
- A beautiful gift book that children will want to read over and over again

After studying Fine Arts in Madrid and working as a freelance illustrator for some time, MARINA RUIZ moved to the UK. She studied at the Cambridge School of Art and graduated with a Distinction in an MA in Children's Book Illustration. Marina takes inspiration from the little moments that happen in everyday life and loves creating small narratives around them. She enjoys working with lyrical, more abstract narratives, combining images and text to express personal thoughts and emotions.

Patterns

Emily Rand (Illustrator)

An art activity book about the incredible patterns found in nature, designed to help bring a little bit of calm into your day

- Perfect for parents looking for calming activities for their children, as well as fans of adult coloring titles
- Encourages children to take a closer look at the natural world, teaching them to be observant and developing their curiosities
- Includes natural history facts around patterns in nature, as well as some handy drawing tips and a useful guide to art materials

EMILY RAND studied illustration at Camberwell College of Arts and the London College of Communication. After graduating she worked with children and young people teaching art and running creative workshops in schools, galleries and museums. Inspired by the beautiful and unusual books in the children's bookshop Chantelivre in Paris, Emily was inspired to start creating picture books in her free time. In 2012 she entered her illustrations to the illustrator's exhibition at Bologna Children's Book Fair. Since then, she has written and illustrated many more books.
